All over the world, one trendy, popular global diet is fast food—prepared items from inexpensive restaurants or snacks, food stands. Some examples of typically American fast food are hamburgers, hot dogs, sandwiches, fried chicken, and so on. For several reasons, many people choose fast food. First, it is quick and convenient. Second, it is cheaper than special home-cooked meals or formal restaurant dinners. And third, it is identical in every eating place with the same company name. The atmosphere and style of most fast-food places is casual, comfortable, and familiar. So why do other eaters dislike or stay away from this fast, easy kind of nourishment? The main reason is in its low nutritional value. Fast food does not contain large amounts of fiber, vitamins, minerals, and the like—elements necessary for good nutrition and health. In contrast, most types of fast food have a lot of fat, cholesterol, sugar, or salt in them.

Possibly, these substances can cause or increase health disorders, like heart disease, strokes, and some kinds of cancer.

Some people believe food should be perfectly fresh and “natural.” According to natural food eaters, fast food is not good for human beings. They do not believe convenience foods—canned, frozen, or packaged in other ways—are very nutritious either. On the other hand, these quick and easy kinds of worldwide nourishment are generally getting better and more healthful. For instance, many fast-food restaurants now have salad bars and put vegetable items on their menus. In some places, customers can get fish or veggieburgers free of meat instead of hamburgers, and grilled chicken instead of fried. Also, some newer kinds of packaged and prepared foods contain less fat, cholesterol, sugar, or salt than before. Of course, people around the world like to indulge themselves with junk food, like candy, cookies, potato chips, ice cream, and other things without much nutritional value. For health and sales reasons, some snack food companies are producing packaged items with less fat, sugar, or salt. And nutrition bars—snacks with a lot of protein, vitamins, and other nourishing food elements—are becoming more widely available.

Americans have a belief in a "melting pot" myth and heritage. They are inclined to forget that many other countries are also "nations of immigrants" and that their numbers are dramatically increasing. In the United States, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, early colonists from Europe, and later, immigrants from other continents, overwhelmed indigenous populations. In each country, immigration has continued contributing not only to national ethnic mixes but maintaining or enlarging the proportion of the population that is foreign born. In Australia, as one example, that population in 2006 equaled 25%; in Canada, it was 18%.

The trend of ethnic mixing is certain to continue and accelerate. Cross-border movements of migrants and refugees in Africa, Asia, the Americas, as well as in Europe, are continuing common occurrences, reflecting growing incidences of ethnic strife, civil wars, famines, and economic hardships. But of even greater long-term influence are the growing disparities in population numbers and economic wealth between the older developed states and the developing worlds. The population of the world's poorer countries is growing twice as fast as Europe's of the late 19th century, when massive groups of immigrants moved to North America. The current rich world, whose population is projected to stabilize well below 1.5 billion, will increasingly be a magnet for those from poorer countries where numbers will rise about 4 billion to reach a number which will probably be more than 6.5 billion by 2025 A.D., and to nearly 8 billion in a half-century. The economic and population pressures building in the developing worlds insure greater international and inter-continental migration and a rapid expansion in the numbers of "nations of immigrants."
