better. It can affect your body, mood, thoughts, and behavior. It can change your eating habits, your ability to work and study, and your interaction with people.

Clinical depression is not a sign of personal weakness, or a condition that can be willed away. In fact, it often interferes with a person's ability or will to get help. It is a serious illness that lasts for weeks, months and sometimes years. It may even influence someone to contemplate or attempt suicide.

People of all ages, genders, ethnicities, cultures, and religions can suffer from clinical depression. Each year it affects over 17 million American men and women (source: American Psychiatric Association). Clinical depression is frequently unrecognized and untreated. But, with the right treatment, most people who do seek help get better within several months. Many people begin to feel better in just a few weeks.

While on vacation, not everyone likes staying at nice hotels, visiting museums, and shopping at department stores. Some would rather jump out of an airplane, speed down a river, or stay in a traditional village. They are part of a growing number of people who enjoy adventure tourism. It is a type of travel for people looking to get more out of their vacations.

With the Internet, it is easier than ever to set up an adventure tour. People can plan trips themselves, or they can find a suitable tour company online. Some popular countries to visit are Costa Rica, India, New Zealand, and Botswana. Their natural settings make them perfect for outdoor activities like hiking and diving. Rich in wildlife, they are also great for bird watching and safaris. Learning about the local history and culture is also popular with adventure travelers. In Peru, people love visiting the ruins of Machu Picchu. And, travelers in Tanzania enjoy meeting local tribes. In some countries, it is even possible to live and work in a village during a vacation. While building houses and helping research teams, travelers can enjoy local food and learn about the culture. Besides being a lot of fun, these exciting trips mean big money for local economies. Tourism is already the world's largest industry, worth some $ 3 trillion. Of that, adventure tourism makes up about 20% of the market. That number is growing, as more people plan exciting vacations in their own countries and abroad.

- (C) 76. What can we infer about adventure tourists from the passage?
(A) They like safe and comfortable vacations.
(B) They have little interest in culture.
(C) They enjoy trips that are exciting.
